December 7, 2012

Sea Level Rise and the SF Bay

"Silicon Valley . . . used to be called the Valley of Heart’s Delight. It was covered with fruit orchards, which were irrigated with well water. As the water was withdrawn, the ground levels sank. The result . . . is that many geeks may join a lot of suburban homeowners in being underwater." So notes Will Travis, Senior Advisor for the Bay Area. . . Read more

Purr Modernism?

From www.moderncat.net, via shine.yahoo.com . . . and just in time for your holiday shopping. Read more

Architecture at Zero 2012

Pacific Gas and Electric Company (PG&E) and AIA San Francisco, in collaboration with UC Merced, have announced the winners of Architecture at Zero 2012. Read more

Barry Berkus, Architect Passes

Barry A. Berkus, a Santa Barbara icon and award-winning architect whose work has been recognized both locally and abroad, died Friday in Santa Barbara. Read more

AIACC Partnership with Trends Publishing

The AIACC appreciates the support of Trends Publishing International for our 2012 Residential Awards Program. We believe Trends print and online content will be of interest to all AIACC members.